Petrographical Investigation of the Salt Wash Sediments John Cedric Griffiths, 1957 This report represents an attempt to use quantitative petrography to elucidate criteria for differentiating ore bearing from barren sediments in the Salt Wash member of the Morrison formation of the Colorado Plateau The main premise upon which this approach is based is that the factors which determine whether a sediment contains ore or not is a function largely if not solely of the characteristics of the sedimentary rock It follows that if this premise is true then the petrographic characteristics of a sediment containing ore should differ from those of the sediments which are barren
