

Genetics

- Genetics influences both desirable and undesirable behavior.
- Examples of behaviors with strong genetic components:
 - criminality, attention deficits, hyperactivity, schizophrenia, depression, Tourette's disorder, autism, and anxiety.
- Behavioral characteristics are determined by both genetic and environmental factors (i.e., social learning).
 - In the case of schizophrenia:
 - The closer the relationship between the child and the schizophrenic relative, the higher the risk for developing this condition.
 - However, once one has a schizophrenic relative, the risk for schizophrenia is determined by stressful environment or drug use.
