

CRITICAL MULTICULTURALISM AND RACISM

- Berlak and Moyenda (2001) argued that liberal conceptions of multiculturalism support "white privilege by rendering institutional racism invisible," leading to the belief that injustices will disappear if people simply learn to get along.
- McCarthy (1995) argued that various models of multicultural education rest far too heavily on attitude changes as means of social transformation and take for granted essentialised racial identities, failing to situate racial inequality within global relations.
- Stephen May (1999a) stated that critical multiculturalism "incorporates postmodern conceptions and analyses of culture and identity; while holding onto the possibility of an emancipatory politics".

Karl Marx discussed political emancipation in his 1844 essay "On the Jewish Question", in addition to (or in contrast with) the term human emancipation. Marx's views of political emancipation in this work can be summarised as "equal status of individual citizens in relation to the state, equality before the law, regardless of religion, property, or other "private" characteristics of individual people."
