

A Descriptive Bibliography of The Modern Library: 1917 - 1970

George M. Andros

TWO years ago, The Modern Library of the World's Best Books made its appearance with twelve titles. It was immediately recognized, to quote the New York Times, "as filling a need that is not quite covered by any other publication in the field just now." The Dial hastened to say "The moderns put their best foot forward in the Modern Library. There is scarcely a title that fails to awaken interest and the series is doubly welcome at this time." A week or so after the publication of the first titles, the Independent wrote: "The Modern Library is another step in the very right direction of putting good books into inexpensive form," and the clever Editor of the Chicago Daily News, in a long review, concluded: "The Modern Library astonishes the cynical with the excellence of its choice of titles. You could stand before a stack of these books, shut your eyes and pick out the right one every time." Despite this enthusiasm, in publishing circles it was considered impossible to continue the sale of these attractive Hand Bound Limp Crocodile leather books, printed in large clear type, at any price under One Dollar a volume. But the large number of intelligent book buyers, a much larger group than is popularly supposed, has not only made possible the continuation of this fine series at the low price of Eighty-five Cents a volume, but has enabled us progressively to make it a better and more comprehensive collection.

... from the introduction to the catalog bound at the back of an early Modern Library volume, circa 1920.
