

A Guide to Clear, Concise Writing

Are your papers dotted with "wordy" or "awkward" throughout their margins? Don't despair. Here are a few tips to tighten up your prose.

AVOID OBSCURE LANGUAGE AND JARGON.

Choosing to use words because they sound more academic can result in confusing sentences. Also, the only legitimate occasion to use jargon comes when you are compiling a lab or field report that may require technical terminology. To be most clear, stick to plain English.

She sprinkled salt on her pasta. ... instead of ... She sprinkled sodium chloride on her pasta.

I checked the meaning of the word in my dictionary. ... instead of ... I checked the meaning of the locution in my reference tome.

OMIT NEEDLESS WORDS.

Avoid those words that add nothing to your writing, such as nature in "a suspicious nature," fact in "the fact that" (just state what the fact is), and character as "of a mean character."

Now... or Currently... ... instead of ... Nowadays... or At this point in time ...

(just state the fact) ... instead of ... Owing to the fact that ...

I say this because... ... instead of ... The reason why I say this is because. . .

He has many talents. ... instead of ... He is a man who has many talents.

He fled. ... instead of ... He left in a hasty fashion.

AVOID POORLY ORGANIZED OR RUN-ON SENTENCES.

Avoid run-on, long or loose sentences that consist of two (or more!) clauses. Instead, organize your thought process or story-line into multiple logical, descriptive, ordered sentences.

See how long this passage holds your attention:

After my first day of college classes, I spent the afternoon at Kathrine's house pretending to study for the test we have coming up, but we really spent the whole time talking about people in our classes and who we know from other classes we are taking, who might want to come to the party Katherine is having at the beach next weekend for her birthday.

Try this instead:

After my first day of college classes, I spent the afternoon at my friend Katherine's house. We had the textbooks from our Spanish language class open on the kitchen table, but we spent most of the time sitting in the sun on her porch. We talked about who from our Spanish language class might come to her birthday party at the beach next Saturday.
