2. Law and morals
3. The justification of punishment
4. The democratic ... of the European union

Orthodox: law is a system of normative decisions, which is separate from politics.

Un-orthodox theorist: Law and punishment is dictated purely by power. Laws which are in place, are so, by virtue only of the power of the persons who want them to be in place.

Orthodox theorists are divided as to whether morality is a key component of law.

Synopsis of topics:

1. Explanation of legal disagreement: Law as it is, Law as it ought to be.
Why would we be interested in explaining it?
This is not where we have a legal disagreement between individuals in an individual case.
We talked about legal agreement, example when an ambulance goes in to a park, legal agreement it should be allowed despite it being against the rules of the park.

Legal disagreement, when what the law is is disjoined from what the law ought to be. 'the law that ought to be'.

Case: some are motivated by a difference in interpretation the law. Some revolve around an issue with the actual law, what the law ought to be. From the latter the individual's case it an attempt to change the law.
It is not a case of interpretation of the law.

2. Law and Morals:
Nothing to do with natural law.

Gay Marriage is the classic example:

How far should the state go in regulating the matter of private morality. What you do may be immoral but is it the state's business.

It might be immoral to commit the act, it might be immoral for the state to intervene. State wasn't punishing or censoring a homosexual activity, wasn't even saying you couldn't have a civil partnership. However, excluding them from marriage constitutes intervention.

3. Justification of Punishment
Deterrence
Retribution

4. European Union
The most democratically legitimate aspect, European Parliament. Whereas the aspects of the EU
Vast majority of EU
