

CHAPTER 2

KINEMATICS OF PLANE MOTION

CURVILINEAR MOTION►

Curvilinear motion occurs when the particle moves along a curved path. In this chapter the general aspects of curvilinear motion are discussed, and the motion referred to the Cartesian coordinates will be discussed.

POSITION►

Consider a particle located at point P on a space curve defined by the path function s , Fig.(1-a). The position of the particle, measured from a fixed point O , will be designated by the position vector $\underline{r} = \underline{r}(t)$. This vector is a function of time ; in general, both its magnitude and direction change as the particle moves along the curve.

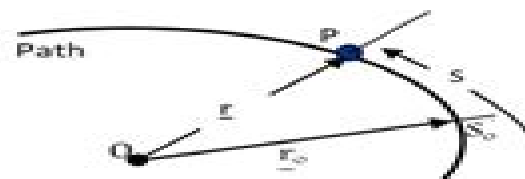

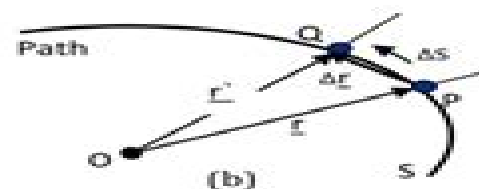

Fig. (1-a)

Displacement►

Suppose that during a small time interval Δt , the particle P moves a distance Δs along the curve to a new position Q , defined by $\underline{r}' = \underline{r} + \Delta \underline{r}$, Fig. (b). The displacement $\Delta \underline{r}$ represents the change in the particle's position and is determined by vector subtraction; i.e.,

$$\Delta \underline{r} = \underline{r}' - \underline{r}$$
