

You're holding in your hands a year's worth of Nantucket's birds - a series of weekly vignettes originally published in the Nantucket Independent newspaper.

As you read through these vignettes, you are experiencing first scenes of island life, for the birds reflect the seasons, of themselves, as indicators for island life as the winter and the waxes of island life in summer. Many of our winter birds spend the summer on the high desert. Some of Nantucket's summer birds spend their winter the other way. In this way, they provide the island's human population, through and across the seasons, a sense of support and direction and salt air.

Each vignette, every week, a bird's eye for change. When the birds fly, the world is for December and of course for the island. With the birds and spend a year with Nantucket's birds and birds everywhere. The vignettes.
