Burning Bush Stephen J. Pyne, 2014-10-07 From the time of the continent's formation tens of millions of years ago as the Godwana twin of Antarctica Australia has been dominated by fire much as its sister has been by ice Now Stephen Pyne one of our foremost environmental historians proposes a major reinterpretation of the Australian experience by using fire and Australia to explain one another He narrates the story of how fire came to Australia and interacted with the Australian biota and its human inhabitants while at the same time he relates the planetary saga of fire as it has been played out on this special island continent Much as the Aborigines exploited fire to remake their environment into something more usable so Stephen Pyne exploits fire to transform the landscape of history into something more accessible to use its transmuting power to extract new meaning out of familiar events Pyne traces the impact of fire from its initial influence on the evolving vegetation of the new continent through its use by the Aborigines and the subsequent European settlers to the holocaust of February 1983 known as Ash Wednesday and he shows us that the dynamic nature of fire has made it a most powerful environmental determinant in Australia shaping both its social and natural histories In his critically acclaimed study of Antarctica The Ice Pyne explored the myriad dimensions of the cold continent now Burning Bush offers us an equally absorbing examination of a continent informed by fire

The Burning Bush, 1924 Modelling, Monitoring and Management of Forest Fires II G. Perona, C. A. Brebbia, 2010 As in the past future forest fire scenarios are impacted by climatic trends and changes in climatic extremes as well as by anthropic pressure It is to be expected that future trends especially in the Mediterranean regions will certainly lead to an increasing impact of human pressure on the natural environment due to increases in tourism and to the enlargement of urban residential areas invading the countryside Forecasting the effects of both factors climatic and anthropic and separating their effects on forest fires frequencies may be particularly difficult but is essential to improve our knowledge of forest fire occurrence probability and to better organize prevention and fighting activities At the same time estimation of the possible increase of fire risk over coming years is important taking into account also the diverse fire prone environments present in the Mediterranean as well as many other areas mountain slopes coastal zones large islands etc This

"Red Books" of the British Fire Prevention Committee ... ,1906

Burning Issues Mark Adams,Peter Attiwill,2011-06-16 Southern Australia is one of the three most fire prone areas on Earth After more than a century of urban growth and valiant efforts to tame the bush recent decades have seen more people moving back onto the fringe or into the middle of this volatile landscape As this movement has intensified so has the debate on how to best protect life and property from the ever present bushfire threat A long running drought and a predicted warming climate have ensured that bushfire is a dominant factor in our nation s long term planning Following the tragic Victorian Black Saturday fires in 2009 a much greater urgency now confronts policy makers land and fire managers and communities living in bushfire areas This has led to a call for a single simple answer on fuel reduction burning to reduce the bushfire risk Burning Issues explains that this is a complex issue without such a simple answer The book gives an account of the role of fire in Australia s ecosystems how we have to accept and live with fire and how we can manage fire both for safety and for diversity It aims to change people s attitudes to fire and to be influential in encouraging changes in land management by government agencies
