

Vertical Power Dynamics in Black Literature: Insights from Lorde, Hurston, and Staples

 Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

In modern society, the problem of inequality of powers and freedoms between different population groups is of particular concern. This leads to various difficulties and conflicts that contribute to the division, not the cohesion of society. In the essay "Scratching the Surface: Some Notes on Barriers to Women and Loving," Audre Lorde presents an example of the negative contribution of vertical lines of power and authority and how it impacts marginalized and oppressed groups. This topic is also raised in Hurston's "Sweat" and Staples's "Black Men in Public Spaces." The analysis of these works will provide an understanding of how vertical lines of power and authority affect oppressed people and the importance of limiting this issue.

On the Verticals Lines of Power or Authority in Black Literature

Scratching the Surface

First of all, it is necessary to pay attention to the topics emphasized in Audre Lorde's work. Among the most prominent are power, marginalization, and horizontal hospitality. Their significance lies in the fact that each, in one way or another, negatively affects the Black community and white women.

The author provides an opinion that power operates in vertical lines, in other words, from top to bottom, reinforcing societal hierarchies and maintaining oppressive systems (Lorde 32). In addition, Lorde identifies several factors that have the greatest impact, including gender, race, sexual preferences, and class (Lorde 32-33). Knowledge of these aspects provides an opportunity to better understand what measures should be taken to simulate the problem under discussion.
