

The Best and Worst U.S. States for Allergies

The severity of different risk factors for allergies — pollen, pets, dust and mold — varies from state to state. Allergy sufferers may fare worst in Kansas, where giant ragweed is present in 99% of counties, the wind blows at a near nation-leading 12 mph, and residents search for “indoor mold” more than any other state.

HouseFresh's Allergy Index was developed by an index of 100 variables that measure the severity of common allergens (pollen, dust, and mold) and their allergens by finding where in the U.S. where the best and worst places to live for sufferers of all kinds of allergies.
