

Bonded Phase Chromatography

In this case, the stationary phase is chemically bonded to the solid support which implies the following:

1. No bleeding
2. Can use stationary phases of any chain length from a C₁ to C₁₈ which reflects very well on the retention characteristics of the column
3. The solid support surface is not completely covered with stationary phase and residual silanol groups may complicate retention mechanism and results in tailing
4. If damaged, the stationary phase can not be regenerated in situ
5. Usually, bonded phase stationary phases are expensive
6. Most widely used (almost exclusively)
