

WILD COLONIAL BOYS

At the old country school I attended, every youngster at heart was a bushranger, hence the game, still popular, "Bushies and Bobbies."

A youngster from the outskirts of a settlement attended the school. His father had a retaining fee from a descendant of one of the Governors, his duty being to keep intact the fences around the large estate. We were regaled by the youngster with tales of nights spent in the bark-roofed home, where father husked corn and mother made cabbage-tree hats. Also the songs that father sang which included "Hegarty's Leather Breeches," "The Old Bark Hut," and "The Wild Colonial Boy." The last-named was our favorite, for there was a yarn current that to sing it was an offence against the law.

One day in the playground, the old teacher crept on us unawares while we were being regaled, and our hero was compelled to face the school and sing the numerous verses describing the escapades and death of that wild Colonial boy. Even now I can remember the nasal intonation that characterised the song.
