Automating Systems Development David R. Benyon, Steve Skidmore, 2012-12-06 1 INTRODUCTION These proceedings are the result of a conference on Automating Systems Development held at Leicester Polytechnic England on 14 to 16 April 1987 The conference was attended by over 170 delegates from industry and academia and it represents a comprehensive review of the state of the art of the use of the computer based tools for the analysis design and construction of Information Systems IS Two parallel streams ran throughout the conference The academic or research papers were the fruit of British European and Canadian research with some of the papers reflecting UK Government funded Alvey or European ESPRIT research projects Two important touchstones guided the selection of academic papers Firstly they should be primarily concerned with system rather than program development Secondly they should be easily accessible to delegates and readers We felt that formal mathematical papers had plenty of other opportunities for airing and publication The second stream was the applied programme a set of formal presentations given by leading software vendors and consultancies It is clear that many advances in systems development are actually applied rather than research led Thus it was important for delegates to hear how leading edge companies view the State of the Art This was supported by a small exhibition area where certain vendors demonstrated the software they had introduced in the formal presentation

The Development of a Fixed Base Automated Weather Sensing and Display System

William R. Tahnk, Richard H Lynch, 1978 The Meteorology Division of the Air Force Geophysics Laboratory developed a computer based observing system called MAWS Modular Automated Weather System to demonstrate the feasibility of automated observing and forecasting techniques using low cost microcomputers Scott AFB Illinois was chosen as the demonstration site and operation commenced in January 1977 Instrumentation at five observing sites is polled periodically each minute and then the data are transmitted on command to the central site over voice grade telephone lines using microcomputers that were designed built and programmed by the authors This use of on site processing eliminated the need for expensive high speed lines as well as centralized processing Instead a microcomputer in the base weather station acts as a supervisor to the four on site microcomputers directing the flow of information throughout the network Parameters observed automatically include wind temperature visibility pressure and cloud base height In addition short range forecasts of visibility and cloud base height are generated These data are then displayed on alphanumeric display devices located in operations centers around the base MAWS data are also continually archived and the capability exists for hard copy printout when desired Author
