Presentation

Read the text and complete the tree diagram in Fig. 15.1:

The raw materials for plastics are coal and oil, and many plastic materials today are produced from oil. Plastics can be divided into two main categories. The first group, called thermoplastics, includes well-known plastics such as PVC, nylon and polythene. These can be treated (heated, softened and cooled) several times, and can be formed into combs, pipes and bags, in addition to many other similar products.

Thermosetting plastics include melamine, polyurethane and phenolic resin, and can be made into tableware, foams and plugs respectively. However, this group differs from thermoplastics because they can be treated only once and harden when they are heated.
