ister is included in the carrier, and it is used to store the gas in both sides of the eyepiece (par. 208), and in preventing fogging by moisture in the mask and in rain. The canister is carried in a carrier under the chin and is connected to the facepiece by a noncombustible hose.

(2) Diaphragm gas masks are issued to officers, noncommissioned officers, telephone operators, and when in duties require audible speech. This mask is similar to service gas mask except that a diaphragm is placed in the facepiece beneath the eyepiece.

(3) Training masks have been developed for the purpose of supplying the Army with a cheap and lightweight mask for training purposes. It differs from the service mask in weight, shape, and size of the canister and carrier. The training mask is essentially a novel-type mask.

(4) Optical masks are issued to officers and enlisted men whose duties require the use of optical instruments such as range finders or binoculars. The eyepieces are small, flat, and in the same plane so that no light can penetrate to the eyes except through the instrument employed at the time. The facepiece is equipped with a diaphragm assembly for communicative purposes. The canister is located at the back of the neck.

c. Special masks and canisters.—(1) Noncombustible mask.—Noncombustible masks are of novel-type construction and give the same degree of protection as the Army training mask. The canister is located directly in the facepiece, and the cellulose acetate eyepieces are sewn into the facepiece (Fig. 13). These masks are designed in four facial sizes; for large and small adults, and for large and small children.
