

The sheath on most knives comes with a giant belt loop so your knife hangs loosely on your belt, and changes location often. Don't put up with it. Customize. Think about having your knife hang high on your belt so it doesn't slice your leg as you slide into your truck. Move your knife where you want it, and aim it between 15 and 25 degrees forward. Put two beads of leather glue where you want your belt to fit snugly. Once the sheath's loop is tightened to fit, you can reach for your knife confidently because it will stay where you put it. The forward aim will allow you to draw your knife to the rear (quicker and easier) and later, after you add a light, it will shine forward to illuminate your walking path.

ANGLED GLUE LINES FOR KNIFE SHEATH LOOP

Glue lines for knife sheath so belt slides in to hold knife and light tightly at forward angle.

When carving up your winter's meat supply, your blade will go dull. You really need to carry a diamond impregnated paddle. Where? On the leg side of your sheath. Don't build a little pouch for it, merely glue it on with epoxy. Then you don't have to dig it out to use it, and the sheath can act as a holding paddle.

While you have the glue in your hand, cut the wrist straps off an L.E.D. watch and attach the time piece to your sheath also. If you get a cheap high-quality Timex, you can use your watch at night. That's important if you are recording travel vectors so you can see the back without a map. Close one eye when noting the time to make sure you preserve your night vision. Flat-tie the back of the watch so it won't catch on your pants. If you are doing a lot of woods-engineering, buy a watch that incorporates a calculator. You can use the storage room you created in your loop to carry a spare battery.

Large loops on your sheath allow your knife to slide all over. Your knife is hard to find if it keeps changing addresses. Use the sheath to make your knife stay at home where you can always locate it.

Night travel is necessary in most of the outdoor terrain you will visit. In the desert during the summer, of course, you need to hole up during the day and move at night. In cold weather, you may not have enough gear with you to bed down at night, but you can sleep in the sun during the day. Of course, if you're tactical, you move at night because we have NVG's. (Night Vision Goggles) and the other side's best night trick is an Iraqi match soaked in vaseline. In any of the above cases, you travel
