

"Escalante," a century and a half ago, were the first white men to Pueblo of the Perished, even then in ruins, and marveled, as do all manner of men had occupied them.

speed on, ever upward. Navajos,' bronze figures, black hair by gray headwork flits, stand impassive at the roadside. The forest of cedar and pine forests rides the cool, sunbathed air.

My turn discloses a new wonder. Above us, on the north rim, a great ledge of sandstone rises there, straight in the air. This is the "Sleeping Ute." Eagles are sweeping, like flying sentinels, over the red square watch towers of stone the Cliff Dwellers built on high on the Mesa rim, and where fires were kindled for smoke signaling parties were descried in the valley, 2,000 feet below.

hundred and thirty-five miles of mountains stretch before us. To the east, silver and purple. To the south are the Lakachukai (Brazo-mountain) where the mirages make magic, sending them into the form of giant mushrooms. To the west is the "Sleeping Ute," a mountain remarkably resembling a human figure, prone upon its back, its arms—flowing hair to the north and toes to the south.

Blue tents in a blue sky are the Carizo mountains in Arizona. West are the Blue mountains of Utah, once the stronghold of fugitives the law. Far away are the La Sal mountains. To the north is the Cone Peak in Colorado, and to the right of it the spire-like Needle Mountains. And, as silvery as their name, to the east are the La Plata mountains.

When to the south brings an unobstructed view of the great dry sea. It is a phantom ship floats—a jeweled ship with ever changing sails—red, ruby red, then coral, rose crystal, pure gold, heliotrope—a color never. This is Shiprock.

Many miles away it stands, a stone cliff, towering in isolated grandeur above the land—above "the mystic sea."

Over the blue of the Colorado sky we ride to the Mesa's top, past ruins and ancient farms. With startling abruptness, the car reaches the square buildings of Mesa Verde National Park.

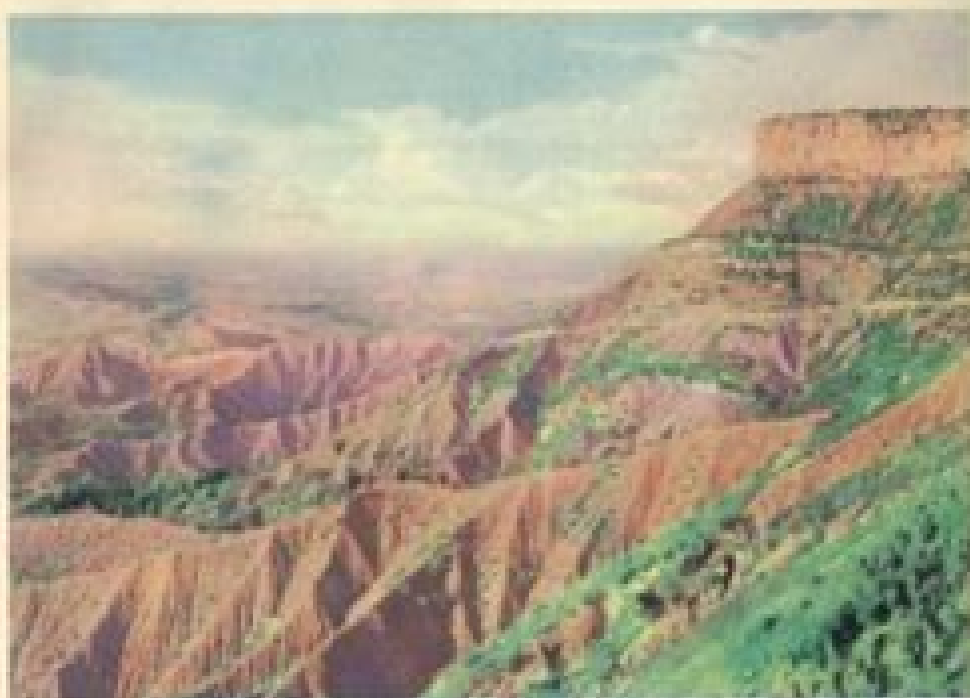

It is but the prelude to the drama. We stand on the brink of a canyon the chert in the river earth, as though carved out of time—of ivory, in the very face of a massive cliff is a canyon pueblo—entirely in its entirety, with streets, towers, terraced houses, granaries and temples.

My breath catches. Scarce believing eyes take in the most stupendous sight in the universe!

There it stands, ghostly in a smiling world of sunshine, a silent town in the vast cavernous pocket of a mammoth wall of sand stone.

Four Spanish-Silvian Voles de Escalante, a missionary at Fort, M.M., several Spanish citizens and four Franciscan Dominicans, left Santa Fe July 28, 1878, to discover a route to the missions in California.

"Prominent 'Navajo'." Having none of the Pueblo Indians' ceremonial fear of the "haunted cliffs,"

We see the first apartment houses in America. We look upon streets that echoed to thousands of feet when the wandering Aztecs were seeking the signs from their fearsome gods to found their capital of Tenochtitlan! when Richard Corcoran de Leon was leading his mailed Crusaders into the Holy Land to recapture Jerusalem!

The explanation of the magnificent distances and the dramatic beauty of the vast island of stone in a rainbow-colored bowl rimmed by far-away mountains, lies in the story of how Mesa Verde came into existence.

Twenty to thirty million years ago all this was actually a sea. The waters evaporated, leaving in layers of salt and gypsum mixed with shale the earliest fossils. Again the waters came, this time from the Gulf of Mexico. Under the deepest part of the ocean a cataclysmic disturbance caused the bottom to sink. The waters, retiring, left exposed a vast plain extending from the San Juan range to the Colorado river. In this age—the Cretaceous—dinosaurs, with other weird, forgotten creatures lived in and around the deep swamp covering the sandy bottom. The ooze, drying through the centuries, formed shale which covers the Dakota Sandstone, full of fossils of shellfish.

The ancient ruins of Mesa Verde are the same the Aztecs used the ruins then built
