

A READING

for Laura Chalar

It's in the cards, those my grandparents used when playing with friends or to make believe that time had nothing to do with growing old or sliding back into another world, one parallel yet intersecting sadness as constantly as the minute hand does its job and never misses a pang and the cards were the practice of keeping you together and present.

I've lost your cards and everything present. I can't repeat the few words I know in Yiddish enough to make an afternoon with you come true.
I turn to someone else with other cards to see if my fantasies will be real, if it's in my cards to share more time with you around a table.
