

X.500

- The X.500 standard is a global directory service that is based on a replicated distributed database
- Programs access the directory services using the X/Open Directory Service (XDS) APIs.
- The XDS API's permit programs to read, compare, update, add, and remove directory entries; list directories; and search for entries based on attributes, while authenticating these activities.
- There are varieties of X.500 products (i.e. Directory Access Protocols) available, and the latest version is LDAP.
 - Lightweight Directory Access Protocol (LDAP) provides the same functions as DAP except it reduces overheads through bypassing much of the session and presentation layers using Distinguished Names (DN)
