

AGRICULTURAL TRANSITION REVISITED: ISSUES OF LAND REFORM AND FARM RESTRUCTURING IN EAST CENTRAL EUROPE AND THE FORMER USSR*

CSABA CSAKI (Budapest University of Economics, Hungary and The World Bank, Washington, DC) and ZVILERMAN (The Hebrew University, Rehovot, Israel)

ABSTRACT

Despite an impressive body of legislation and continued public preoccupation with land privatization and farm restructuring issues, the implementation of agricultural sector reforms in former Socialist countries in Europe has been much slower than originally anticipated. Political and legal uncertainty, lack of a supportive environment, high risk and lack of risk-management instruments, as well as inadequate mechanisms for farm restructuring and individual exit are among the factors responsible for the relatively modest accomplishments of agrarian reform. Only East Central European countries and the Baltics acknowledge true private ownership of land. The political establishment in most former Soviet republics is still deeply divided on this fundamental issue, and even countries that legally recognize private ownership impose many restrictions that often invalidate the very notion of privately owned land. Agriculture in the region is developing toward a mixture of organizational forms, in which large-scale collective and group farming continues to coexist with rapidly emerging family farms.

RÉSUMÉ

Malgré une législation impressionnante et bien que le public soit continuellement préoccupé de la privatisation agraire et des questions qui touchent à la restructuration des fermes, l'implémentation des réformes agraires dans les anciens pays socialistes en Europe s'est produite beaucoup plus lentement que l'on avait prévu originellement. Les facteurs qui ont mené aux résultats assez modestes des réformes agraires comprennent, entre autres, l'incertitude politique et juridique, le manque d'environnement encourageant, le facteur de risque élevé et le manque de moyens de gestion des risques, aussi bien que les mécanismes inadéquats pour atteindre la restructuration des fermes et le choix individuel de quitter les fermes collectives. Il n'y a que les pays situés en Europe de l'Est et les pays baltes qui reconnaissent la propriété foncière privée. Dans la plupart des anciennes républiques soviétiques, ceux qui font la loi dans le monde politique sont toujours profondément divisés sur cette question fondamentale; même les pays qui reconnaissent légalement la propriété foncière privée imposent un grand nombre de restrictions qui, souvent, en invalident la notion même. L'agriculture dans la région se transforme en un ensemble de divers formes organisationnelles, où l'agriculture collective à grande échelle continue de coexister avec les fermes familiales, dont il y a de plus en plus.
