The Society of British Theatre Designers Http: The Society of British Theatre Designers, The Human Stage John Orrell, 2009-06-18 This book describes the theatres of the time of Shakespeare and Ben Jonson in the light of the contemporary architectural thought and building design John Orrell incorporates recent discoveries about the structure of theatres such as the Red Lion playhouse 1567 the Christ Church Theatre Oxford 1605 and the Paved Court Theatre Somerset House 1632 in a re-examination of old assumptions about their design and origins Orrell shows that the first public theatres exemplified by the Globe on the Bankside were fully realised architectural ideas not ad hoc improvisations Indoor playhouses such as the Blackfriars and the Cockpit Drury Lane show clear signs of having been influenced by the theatre scheme of Sebastiano Serlio a scheme which is human in scale methodical in development and Roman in plan Serlio's scheme is identified as a common link between the great public theatres of Shakespeare's time the major private theatres and the Court masques designed by Inigo Jones The story of the early stages is thus more coherent and more interesting than has been supposed The book is extensively illustrated with contemporary views of London theatre plans and scene designs
