

2.2. THE ARTICULATORS (in the Vocal Tract)

All the organs (shown on the figure below) contribute in the production of speech.

All the sounds of English are made using air on its way out from the lungs. The lungs pull in and push out air, helped by the diaphragm. The air goes out via the trachea, where the first obstruction it meets is the larynx. Inside the larynx the air passes by the vocal folds (cords), which, may vibrate or not. Afterwards the air goes up through the pharynx, and escapes via either the oral or the nasal cavity.
