Description du cours / Course outline

This class intends to offer the students an overview of international politics since the early twentieth century, focusing on the origins, course, and impact of the two World Wars and the Cold War. The extra-European worlds will also be given a special focus, from the collapse of the Western colonial empires to the apparition of new international or regional centres of power, notably in Asia and Africa. Finally, the course will end by a reflexion on how to make the history of international relations, emphasising the "new diplomatic history".

Objectifs pédagogiques du cours / Course objectives

- Understanding the major developments in international relations since the First World War
- Understanding the multiple facets (political, economic, social, cultural, etc.) of international relations and their influence in the evolution of societies in the 20th century, in particular outside the European continent
- developing your critical thinking about the past, and about the value of history for thinking about the key political and governmental challenges
