Dear Interviewer/Producer,

BEFORE THEIR TIME. Four generations of teenage mothers (grandmothers, mothers, daughters) from H.B.J. in action, researcher and therapist Joelle Sander, with a foreword by Robert Coles, is a unique oral history of the lives of four women in the teen family-speak-grammar, production, action, and motherhood-all of whom have teenage mothers. During her ten years of research in the field of adolescent parenthood, Joelle Sander observed a similar phenomenon: very often the cycle of teenage pregnancy repeats itself in families. Almost no firsthand information exists about why this is true, so Joelle Sander went back for themselves. Sander has created a groundbreaking document that explains many of the problems of being poor and a woman in America. It also chronicles the devastating economic conditions that successive generations endured.

Leaving deep inside the ghetto, into the classrooms of family life, Joelle Sander interviews these women to discover why and how the phenomenon of teenage parenthood persists from generation to generation. The reasons are complex and varied. The women in this book speak of terrible poverty, family dysfunction, of physical and sexual abuse, of lack of social support, drug and alcohol abuse, prostitution, and parental abandonment. For many of these women having a pregnant youth having a chance to make a new life for them, to escape the cycles of the lives in which they grew up.

Finally Sander suggests some solutions to these dire problems. Among them, she proposes the reworking of public education, smaller classes, more parent and teacher involvement, specialized after-school programs, and accessible contraception coupled with a new education program that begins early in elementary school.

Joelle Sander is available to discuss her research and findings. For more information, contact her at (212) 633-4000.
