Brand Building On The Internet:

Brand Building on the Internet Martin Lindström, Tim Frank Andersen, 2000 A corporate Web site on the Internet is no longer enough to survive in today's competitive online environment. This volume analyzes a range of international companies to demonstrate how the Internet demands a strategic way of thinking about marketing interactive brands to consumers. It also gives readers concrete tools to create a brand strategy on the Internet and answers questions such as what role should the Internet have in a marketing plan, what types of companies are best suited to market our product on the Internet, how can a systematic dialogue between the consumer and the brand be created, how can strong traffic on a site be created, and how is it possible to measure the real value of branding a site. There are reviews of over 70 international Web sites and 40 case studies on companies such as Pepsi, Lego, Yellow Pages, M&Ms, FedEx, Kodak, Volkswagen, and Visa. Use of Internet as a Brand Building Tool Richards Macdonald, 2013-04-22 Seminar paper from the year 2011 in the subject Communications Multimedia Internet New Technologies grade A The University of Chicago language English abstract The emergence of the Internet has provided a powerful marketing medium for all businesses, whether big or small, new or old. It has enabled all types of businesses to promote their brands easily. The Internet explosion in the past few years has changed the entire business processes and outlined the future business operations. The changes are visible in almost all business operations, and they have initiated rethinking of supply chain networks, reconfiguration of products and services, or revamping of business models. The most significant change has been noticed in the promotional activities and in the use of the Internet as a brand building tool. The Internet has offered new opportunities, making traditional business practices outdated. It provided the opportunity to reach a wide range of audience and create never before possible propositions. It also provided a new tool for promoting business, interacting with people, and building relationships. It has also empowered customers with information and many options, and has changed the fundamental concepts of interaction between companies and customers. These tremendous changes in customer relationships, customer service, and branding require new strategies and tools for brand building. The Internet has enabled new entrepreneurs to create new and strong brands, thus leaving established brands behind. Internet companies like Amazon.com, Yahoo, eBay, and America Online (AOL) have established strong brands in a short span of time, whereas the traditional companies have taken decades for the same. Figure 1 below exhibits the time taken in years by the Internet companies in reaching 100 million mark. Brandchild Martin Lindström, Martin Lindström, Patricia B. Seybold, 2003 Praise and Reviews This is a must-read book. Lindström provides fascinating stories taking you into the mental and emotional life of this new generation. Philip Kotler, S.C.
