1. Introduction

The currently available collaborative elearning technologies caters to student-centric applications mostly focussing on learning management system. Whereas there exists no collaborative applications that focus on teachers' or author's requirements for developing learning objects. SELF Platform is built to bridge this gap in the available applications within free software. SELF Platform can be briefly described as a teacher-centric system developed to provide collaborative authoring of courses. The SELF Platform is live and presently has a collection of around 50 learning materials on free software. In this article, we present the features of the SELF Platform.

2. SELF Platform

The title SELF stands for a short acronym for "Science, Education and Learning in Freedom" emphasizing science as a body of knowledge, education and learning signifying the two cultural and cognitive processes, and freedom signifying the need to liberate the knowledge as well as the delivery mechanisms. The SELF Platform [1] is a web-based collaborative and distributed authoring system specially crafted keeping teachers and authors in view on the one hand [2] and the guiding principles of free software and free knowledge on the other [3]. The most important inspiration for developing such a system comes from the collaborative authoring platform, the Wikimedia used by Wikipedia [4]. While Wikipedia caters to all possible knowledge, the SELF Platform focusses on creating a support system for collaboratively authoring and networking learning materials in an organized manner keeping in mind the teaching and learning process. The learning materials in the SELF Platform are exportable in the form of SCORM [6], which is a widely used open standard for distributing and packaging online learning resources.

SCORM (Shareable Content Object Reference Model) is an e-learning standard developed by the ADL (Advanced Distributed Learning) consortium. SCORM plays an important role in web-based learning technologies. It provides a standardization for the contents that are used and distributed over the Internet using any Learning Management Systems (LMS). The ease of portability and reusability of learning objects are the fundamental
