characterized by a complex mix of colonial exploitation poverty and limited industrialization

Key Features of the Indian Economy Before Independence

Agriculture Dominance Agriculture was the backbone of the economy employing about 70-80% of the workforce Landholdings were generally small and farmers faced various challenges such as tenancy issues lack of credit and dependence on monsoons

Colonial Legacy The British colonial rule had left a deep imprint on India's economy with policies often designed to benefit British interests

Industries were concentrated in a few urban centres mainly for processing raw materials for export

Limited Industrialization India had a nascent industrial sector mostly comprising small scale industries and cottage industries

Major industries like textiles jute and steel were in existence but were largely underdeveloped compared to their potential

Trade and Commerce India's trade was dominated by British interests with raw materials being exported to Britain and finished goods imported back into India

Infrastructure such as railways and ports primarily served the purpose of facilitating colonial trade

Infrastructure The infrastructure was inadequate and unequally developed across regions

Railways though extensive were largely geared towards transporting raw materials for export rather than promoting industrial growth

Poverty and Social Issues Poverty was widespread with a large population living below the poverty line

Social issues such as caste based discrimination and limited access to education and healthcare persisted

Political Unrest The economy was affected by political movements and unrest against British rule which often disrupted economic activities

Challenges on the Eve of Independence

Economic Dependence India was economically dependent on Britain both in terms of trade and technology

Infrastructure Deficit Limited infrastructure development hindered economic growth

Social Issues Poverty illiteracy and social inequality posed significant challenges

Industrial Backwardness The industrial sector was underdeveloped leading to limited job opportunities outside agriculture

In summary the Indian economy on the eve of independence was characterized by its agrarian base colonial exploitation limited industrialization and significant social and economic challenges

The period following independence would witness efforts to address these issues through economic planning industrialization policies and social reforms aimed at transforming India into a modern nation
