significant differences between the two conditions were found for the dependent variables of perceived exertion, heart rate, and oxygen consumption. The 1000 g condition significantly increased perceived exertion, heart rate, and oxygen consumption compared to the 500 g condition. The 1000 g condition also significantly increased heart rate and oxygen consumption compared to the 500 g condition. The 1000 g condition also significantly increased heart rate and oxygen consumption compared to the 500 g condition.

These authors' general conclusions are that the effects of the intervention on the children's social skills were significant, but the effects on the children's academic skills were not significant. The authors' conclusions are based on the results of the study, which were not statistically significant.

FOR MORE FACTS:

- Shades of grey: the recognition that the 4-5 million in countries bordering the Sahel are not all 'at risk' of famine. Most are in relatively secure situations and will only be affected if the situation deteriorates significantly. They should be helped to build up their capacity to cope.
- Small humanitarian crises: the need to respond and build the capacity of local communities.
- Disaster management: a new paradigm for preparing, managing and responding to disasters.
