

LAB TOOLS?

Animals are used in experiments for a variety of reasons. Some are used to test new drugs, some to study diseases, and some to study the effects of environmental factors. Animals are also used to study the effects of radiation, chemicals, and other substances. In order to use animals in experiments, they must be kept in cages and fed food that is specially prepared for them. Animals are also used to study the effects of stress, pain, and other factors. In some cases, animals are used to study the effects of human behavior. For example, animals are used to study the effects of stress on the human body. In some cases, animals are used to study the effects of human behavior on the environment. For example, animals are used to study the effects of human behavior on the environment.

Every year around 3 million animals are used in experiments in British laboratories.

Used in everything from cosmetics to medicine, pesticides, chemicals, and biological tests, the reason for using animals in experiments is that they have the ability to feel pain and discomfort and therefore will exhibit behavior responses in predictable ways. There are many reasons why animals are used in experiments, and we will explore some of them in this article.

But, for thought, which animals that you use regularly do you think have been tested on animals?

FOOD?

Over 2 billion of the 10 billion people living on this planet are vegetarians. This is a growing trend, and it is important to understand why.

Every year in the UK nearly 1,000 million animals are used in that people can eat their flesh.

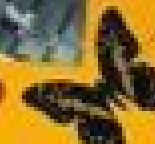

But for thought, isn't it right to feel sorry for the food which we can live perfectly happily on a vegetarian diet?

Most of these animals are raised under huge, crowded, stressful factory farms, where they are forced to grow as fast as possible in the shortest possible time. They are treated in ways that are cruel and inhumane, and they are often killed in the most painful way possible.

The fact is that the majority of the food that we eat is produced in a way that is cruel and inhumane. It is important to understand why this is the case, and to take steps to reduce the demand for animal products.

FUN?

Animals are used for entertainment in all sorts of ways. They are often kept in cages and forced to perform tricks or stunts. Others are forced to fight or to be used in other ways that are cruel and inhumane.

Many people like to watch animals in the wild, and there are many ways to do this. One way is to visit a zoo or a wildlife park. Another way is to watch a documentary on television. A third way is to go on a safari in a game reserve. All of these ways are good, and they can help us to learn more about the animals that live in the wild.

Animals are used in many ways for entertainment. They are often kept in cages and forced to perform tricks or stunts. Others are forced to fight or to be used in other ways that are cruel and inhumane.

The question is not can they reason the way they can but can they suffer pain and distress.

But, for thought, isn't it right to feel sorry for the food which we can live perfectly happily on a vegetarian diet?

Just like people, animals can experience pain and pleasure, loneliness and fear. They have families, they care for their young, and they want to be safe, comfortable and free - just like you and me.

Breeders and pet shops make money out of selling animals, whilst thousands of others are left homeless in sanctuaries. Many abandoned animals are killed because nobody adopts them.

PETS?

Doesn't matter if your companion animal is a dog, cat or a bird, all animals are precious to us. They are part of our lives, and we should treat them with love and respect. They are also sentient beings, and they can feel pain and pleasure.
