

PSALMS

INTRODUCTION

Title

The titles “Psalms” and “Psalter” came from the Septuagint (the pre-Christian Greek translation of the OT), where they originally referred to stringed instruments (such as harp, lyre and lute), then to songs sung with their accompaniment. The traditional Hebrew title is sefer (meaning “book”), see note on Ps 143 titled, even though many of the psalms are tehillah (meaning “praises,” including laments) in fact, one of the first collections included in the book is titled “the praises of David son of Jesse” (20:1).

Collection, Arrangement and Date

The Psalter is a collection of collections and represents the final stage in a process that began in the early days of the first (Jerusalem) temple (or even earlier in the time of David), when the temple liturgy began to take shape. Both the scope of its subject matter and the arrangement of the whole collection strongly suggest that this collection was created by its final editors as a guide for the life of faith in accordance with the Law, the Prophets and the writings. By the first century AD it was referred to as the “Book of Psalms” (Lk 20:17; Ac 1:26), at that time Psalms appears also to have been used as a shorthand designation for the entire section of the Hebrew OT canon most commonly known as the writings (see Lk 10:43 and note). Many collections preceded this final compilation of the Psalms (e.g., “the prayers of David,” noted above).

Additional collections explicitly referred to in the present Psalter titles are: (i) the songs and/or psalms “in the time of David” (Ps 42–48; 54–60; 63–68), (ii) the psalms and/or songs “of Asaph” (Ps 50; 73–83) and (iii) the songs “of Heman” (Ps 100–102).

Other evidence points to further compilations. Ps 1–42 (Book I) make frequent use of the divine name Yahweh (“the Lord”), while Ps 43–72 (Book II) make frequent use of Elohim (“God”). Moreover, Ps 73–100 appear to be a traditional collection (see “The Lament Songs” in pp. 5, 160), 101–150. Other apparent groupings include Ps 151–154 (a series of Hallelujah psalms; see introduction to Ps 151–154), Ps 138–141 (each of which include “of David” in their titles) and Ps 142–150 (each of which begins and ends with “Praise the Lord”).

In its final edition, the Psalter contained 150 psalms. On this the Septuagint (the pre-Christian Greek translation of the OT) and Hebrew texts agree, though they arrive at this number differently

A QUICK LOOK

Authors: David, Asaph, the Sons of Korah, Solomon, Heman, Ethan, Moses and unknown authors

Audience: God’s people

Date: Between the time of Moses (probably about 1440 BC) and the time following the Babylonian exile (after 538 BC)

Theme: God, the Israel King, praises the psalmists’ words of lament and praise that are appropriate responses to God the Septuagint has an extra psalm at the end (but not numbered separately as Ps 151, it also orders Ps 1–150 like the Hebrew text, but with Ps 119–150 and divides Ps 119 and Ps 150 into two psalms. Both the Septuagint and Hebrew texts number Ps 42–43 as two psalms, though they were evidently originally one (see first text note on Ps 42).

In its final form the Psalter was divided into five books (Book I: Ps 1–42; Book II: 43–72; Book III: 73–89; Book IV: 90–106; Book V: 107–150), each of which was provided with a concluding doxology (see 42:10; 72:18–19; 89:52; 106:48; 150). The first two of these books were probably psalms. The division of the remaining psalms into three books, thus attaining the number five, was possibly in imitation of the five books of Moses, in spite of this five book division, the Psalter was clearly thought of as a whole, with an introduction (Ps 1–2) and a conclusion (Ps 146–150). Notes throughout the Psalms give additional indications of conscious arrangement.

Authorship and Titles (or Superscriptions)

Of the 150 psalms, only 36 lack superscriptions of any kind (only 1 in the Septuagint, the pre-Christian Greek translation of the OT). These psalms are found mainly in Books III–V, where they tend to occur in clusters: Ps 89; 90–91; 92; 93–94; 95–96; 97–98; 99–100; 101–102; 103–104; 105–106; 107–108; 109–110; 111–112; 113–114; 115–116; 117–118; 119–120; 121–122; 123–124; 125–126; 127–128; 129–130; 131–132; 133–134; 135–136; 137–138; 139–140; 141–142; 143–144; 145–146; 147–148; 149–150.

The contents of the superscriptions vary but fall into a few broad categories: (i) author, (ii) name of collection, (iii) type of psalm, (iv) musical notation, (v) liturgical notation and (vi) brief indications of occasion for composition. For details, see notes on the titles of the various psalms.

There is no consensus as to the antiquity and reliability of these superscriptions. That many of them are at least psalms appears evident from the fact that the Septuagint translators were sometimes unclear as to their meaning. Furthermore, the practice of attaching titles, including the name of the author, is ancient. On the other hand, comparison between the Septuagint and the Hebrew texts shows that the content of some titles was still subject to change well into the postexilic period.

As for the superscriptions regarding historical occasion of composition, many of these brief notations of events read as if they had been taken from a Septuagint Menology; they are sometimes not easily correlated with the content of the psalms they head. This suggests they may be later attempts to fit the psalms into the real life events of history, though the limited number of such notations and apparent mismatches raises some doubt in this regard.
