Endothelium

Normal

The wall of an artery has several layers. The inner layer, the endothelium, is smooth and reflects the blood. The middle layer is composed of muscle. The outer layer is a ring of connective tissue.

Unstable Atheroma

Thrombus

Initial injury

The artery's endothelium becomes injured or diseased. When blood cells move out of the bloodstream, through the endothelial lining, and into artery's wall, it does so under normal conditions. They transform into foam cells, then proliferate, making cholesterol.

Plaque

Lesion

Middle development

Smooth muscle cells move into the endothelium and multiply. Cell debris, cholesterol crystals, and calcium also accumulate. This lump of cells and material forms an atheroma, or plaque.

Thrombus

Late stages

As it grows larger, the plaque thickens the artery's wall and bulges and tears the lining. This narrows the lumen and blocks blood flow through the artery. Plaque that only on blood flow does this artery do not receive enough oxygen.

If the plaque splits open ruptures the artery's wall and blood can enter the lumen. This causes a blood vessel on the artery's wall to form which narrows the artery's lumen. The plaque of the blood flow. This causes a blood clot or plaque build up and blood through the bloodstream to block an artery elsewhere.

What Is Atherosclerosis?

Arteries carry oxygen-rich blood from your heart to the rest of your body. Healthy arteries are flexible and elastic. Atherosclerosis is a disease in which deposits of fatty material, called atheromas or plaques, develop in walls of medium-sized and large arteries. Atheromas make arteries narrow and hardened, which leads to blocked blood flow to the brain, heart, kidneys, other vital organs, and legs.

Causes

Atherosclerotic plaques are the result of repeated, subtle injuries to the arterial wall. This injury may be the result of physical trauma from turbulent blood flow (as in hypertension) or from inflammatory stresses from abnormal levels of chemicals in the bloodstream (as in uncontrolled diabetes or high blood cholesterol levels).

Risk factors associated with the development of atherosclerosis

- High blood pressure
- Using any type of tobacco
- Diabetes
- High blood cholesterol levels
- Obesity
- Physical inactivity
- Poor diet
- Family history
- Advancing age
- Being male

Symptoms

Atherosclerosis develops slowly over time and mild atherosclerosis has no symptoms at all. When symptoms appear, they vary from person to person and depend on where the affected artery is located and whether it is gradually narrowing or suddenly blocked.

- The typical symptoms resulting from a gradual narrowing of the artery is chest pain, shortness of breath, pain in one or both arms, left shoulder, neck (jaw or back, dizziness, nausea). These symptoms may not appear until the artery's blood flow is reduced by more than 50%.
- Sudden, severe symptoms, such as stroke, heart attack, or clot, occur when plaques suddenly burst and a blood clot, or thrombus, suddenly develops and completely blocks blood flow through the artery.

Complications

Coronary Artery Disease (CAD)

Arteries supplying the heart become narrowed reducing blood flow to the heart muscle and leading to angina pectoris, heart attack, or heart failure.

Stroke

Carotid artery disease affects the arteries on each side of the neck that supply the brain, leading to transient ischemic attacks and stroke.

Kidney Disease

Chronic kidney disease affects renal arteries, leading to kidney failure and renal hypertension.

Aneurysm

An aneurysm may develop if the plaque weakens the arterial wall. This dangerous bulging of an artery may rupture, causing life-threatening bleeding.

Peripheral Arterial Disease (PAD)

PAD affects the arteries to the legs, arms, and pelvis, leading to pain and swelling with walking, intermittent claudication, numbness, and increased risk of infection.

Treatments & Tips

Medications

Take medications to lower cholesterol, control blood pressure, control diabetes, and prevent blood clots.

Surgery

Surgeries, such as angioplasty, coronary artery bypass graft, or carotid endarterectomy, may be necessary to improve blood flow to the affected tissue.

Healthy Lifestyle Choices

A healthy lifestyle can reduce the risk of developing atherosclerosis or improve atherosclerotic symptoms.

- Stop using tobacco.
- Improve diet to lower cholesterol.
- Exercise physically as often.
- Maintain a healthy weight.
- Control high blood pressure.
- Control diabetes.
