At Home in the City Elizabeth Klimasmith, 2005 A lucidly written analysis of urban literature and evolving residential architecture In the middle of the nineteenth century urban families began to inhabit apartment houses boarding houses tenements and hotels These multi unit residences began to define American city landscapes a shift that had enormous interpersonal and cultural repercussions These new forms of housing altered the ways in which Americans inhabited and understood urban space Helping to create among city dwellers a distinctively modern subjectivity were a host of writers among them Hawthorne James and Nella Larsen who experimented in prose with the possibilities and dangers of urban space Reformers planners and engineers simultaneously helped to shape urban sensibilities by experimenting with architectural form in the city's physical landscape often hoping to shape a particular type of citizen with their designs Imaginatively juxtaposing literary criticism with a history of the built environment Klimasmith examines urban domestic fiction alongside architectural sociological and photographic texts of the period pairing important American novels with developments in urban domestic architecture always more fluid and dynamic than traditional scholarship holds her study allows us to witness the unfolding of modernity and to view the modernist subject at its very inception and specific foreign lands A picture emerges of the journey that Van Morrison details through his songs one that sees him first wandering as a boy through his East Belfast haunts and then venturing out to a wider world away from this local place
