Teacher Directives:

- This activity is meant to allow students to explore the specific characteristics of what makes behavior abnormal. Students are then able to apply that criteria to the different case studies featuring a variety of variables/factors. The below criteria should be understood by students before completing this activity.
  - The criteria for determining abnormal behavior includes:
    - Is the behavior unusual?
    - Does the behavior go against social norms?
    - Does the behavior cause significant subjective discomfort?
    - Is the behavior maladaptive?
    - Does the behavior cause the person to be a danger to themselves or others?
- This activity can be done as table-based stations or as a kinesthetic activity with the case studies posted on surfaces around a space.
  - This could also be a stationary activity if copies of the case studies are printed for all students.
- Students should be broken into pairs or groups.
- Students should visit each case study and determine if the behavior should be considered abnormal and brainstorm what a possible diagnosis would be.
- Students should note their predictions for each case study.
- Once students are able to go through each case study, discuss as a class if time allows.
