

Bolshevik Salute: A Modernist Chinese Novel. By Wang Meng. Translated by Wendy Larson. Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1989. Pp. x + 154. Forward by Wang Meng. Introduction and Critical Essay by Wendy Larson. $20.00.

Wendy Larson has fluidly translated Wang Meng's earliest attempt at modernist fiction, Bu li, a novella [zhongpian] no shorter than many novels in English. The upraised fist of the Bolshevik salute symbolizes the dawning of a brave new world for the protagonist Zhong Yicheng, an educated but painfully naïve junior Communist party bureaucrat whose loyalty to the party comes under severe strain during vicious purges from the late 1950s to the 1970s. A typical feature of the bildungsroman comes to the fore when the heretofore maudlin protagonist greets his exoneration in the late 1970s with a coldly placid gaze, convinced that he and his fellow citizens "are no longer children" at the mercy of "mountains of lies and treachery" (131). Yet the concluding drumbeat of optimism about the ultimate realizability of the dream behind the Communist "Internationale" betrays Zhong Yicheng's inability to slough off the sort of tendentious prattle so often found in socialist realism: as Larson convincingly argues in her interpretive essay, he cannot fully extricate himself from the linguistic "prison" of party dogma.

Since writing this piece in 1979, Wang Meng's advocacy of broader technical experimentation in PRC fiction has often gone beyond polemics within the cultural bureaucracy to take the form of setting a personal example through his own fiction. During the post-Mao cultural thaw of 1979-80, a handful of his works constituted the most formidable authorial challenge to the PRC legacy of plodding, documentary-style prose—at least among major authors publishing primarily in the official journals and publishing houses. Stream-of-consciousness passages, long a foreign oddity or else something limited to Chinese writers on the other side of the Taiwan straits, suddenly appeared in a homegrown mainland writer: "The violent wind was surging, calling, scattering, flying. The mast tilted in the huge waves, the snowcap tumbled from the mountain peak, liquid in the earth spurted out of rocks, heads rolled this way and that on the streets" (97). Perhaps none of us would react to these lines by jumping up to nominate Wang Meng for the Nobel Prize, but the renowned critic Li Tuo has astutely pointed out the freshness and originality of such writing in the context of early post-Mao fiction (see his article in Shiye #4, 1980, 239-244). The abrupt, disjunctive shifts from one mental association to another—from one storm-like image to another—strike Li Tuo as wholly foreign to traditional Chinese narrative, but resonant with certain twentieth-century Western novels. Furthermore, the bafflement generated by such passages among many PRC critics less familiar with stream-of-consciousness narrative approaches would also suggest that Larson has properly
