Solar Power Inverters

An inverter takes DC current and converts it to AC current. There are two types of inverters used for solar power generation and depending on the design, a solar power system will use only one type.

Learn More About Microinverters and How They Work \(Cont'd\)

Microinverters

A micro inverter is a small inverter that is built inside of the solar panel itself, converting the DC current generated by the solar panel into AC current. With solar panels that use microinverters, the solar string is effectively generating AC current.

Each micro inverter includes a microcontroller running a control loop that manages the complete DC to AC conversion process, while maximizing the solar panel's output power to produce the optimum AC power for the grid. The conversion process can vary depending on temperature, time of day and cloud cover. The output of the microinverters are fed to the Combiner Box.

String Inverter

If the solar cells do not contain their own microinverters then a single string inverter is used. A string inverter combines the DC current of a string of solar panels without microinverters in parallel. In solar power, a string is a row of solar panels fed together in parallel. The output of a string inverter is the combined output of all the solar cells, converted into positive AC current. The output of a string inverter is fed to the AC Disconnect Box.
