

Economy of the Historic Kickapoo in Central Illinois" by Paul Parmelee and Walter Klippel gives a detailed inventory of faunal remains from the Rhoads site, occupied by Kickapoo during Quinby's Late Illinoian period (1760-1820). Kickapoo diet, butchering practices, resource utilization, and seasonality of site use are inferred.

In "The Holly Oak Shell Game: An Historic Archaeological Fraud," David Meltzer and William Starnaevant make a convincing case, based on circumstantial evidence, that a shell gorget bearing the likeness of a mammoth, said by Hildegarde T. Cresson to have been found in Delaware in 1864, is fraudulent. Cresson is thought to have engraved the mammoth on an authentic Fort Ancient gorget.

Indian Art Traditions of the Northwest Coast. Roy L. Carls, ed. Honolulu, H.G.: Archaeology Press, Simon Fraser University, 1964. 214 pp. $15.00 (paper).

THEODORE STERN
University of Oregon

The representational art of the Northwest Coast, one of the most complex traditions of native America, and one for which trans-Pacific affinities have long been advocated, has had until recently a relatively unknown prehistory. In 1970, a symposium was held at Simon Fraser University, dedicated to Erna Gunther, too taking stock of that tradition in the light of excavations undertaken in the past few decades. Those papers here presented, in an attractive volume abundantly illustrated—financed by typographical cues—are a fruitful blending of ethnology and prehistory.

Among the ethnologists, Bill Holm demonstrates some of the formal attributes of the historic art—eschewing larger features of composition—and traces the manner in which they may have evolved from earlier forms. Wilson Duff, in one of the most stimulating essays in the collection, investigates the idiom of Northwest Coast artistic symbolism in structural terms readily convertible into those of myth and of ritual symbolism. Although we may not always agree with his interpretations, he brings us to see the images with fresh eyes. Wayne Suttles examines the sociocultural associations of Comox Salish art, and suggests the manner in which social and religious factors may have inhibited artistic expression. Finally, in an article poised at the intersection of prehistory and the present, Richard Daugherty and Janet Friedman review the art of the Ojette site, a Makah village buried some 400 years ago. The wealth of coeval artifacts makes possible a well-rounded characterization of many aspects of art, including the textile, otherwise little represented in this volume.

The strictly archeological treatment is best represented by Charles E. Borden's impressive series from the delta and canyon of the lower Fraser River. In a cultural succession commencing from 7000 B.C., he finds incipient art in a developmental period from 3500 B.C., and forms clearly substantiating the historic art in a climax period, 1100 B.C.-A.D. 350. Borden draws upon historic cultures in advancing suggestions as to ritual associations for archeological items.

Starna permits his brief mention of the other articles. The editor, Roy L. Carls, has contributed an introductory overview of the prehistoric record, a chapter detailing the prehistoric art of the Central Coast of British Columbia, and a concluding chapter summarizing regional changes in art over time. Doris Lundy sketches in regional styles of rock art, George MacDonald, the prehistoric art of the northern Northwest Coast, and Atsoud Styd, the prehistoric mobile art of the Plateau reaches of the Fraser-Thompson drainage.

Taken together, the articles in this volume build upon, but go beyond, Drucker's seminal formulation of an earlier sculptural style, manifested particularly in the Walakpa south and sometimes among the Tlaxila, and the later emergence of an applied style. This appeared among the Haida, Tsimshian, and Tlingit in the north, with a later, retroflex influence on the Nootka, and possibly, adds Borden, on the Salish as well. The archeological record also attests to a long period of continuity in the art of these proliferate people—a record that theories of the dynamics of art styles must take into account. Finally, for those still engrossed with the possibility of trans-Pacific links, the long record somewhat narrows the time gap between prehistoric Asian analogues and those of the Northwest Coast, while at the same time rendering it more probable that the latter evolved in place.
