

FOULSHAM

Work commenced in 1941 on this airfield, situated 15 miles north-west of Norwich in the parishes of Wood Norton and Foulsham, and a half mile north of the latter village. Laid out with three concrete runways, 01-19 of 1,900 yards, 08-26 of 1,400 yards and 15-33 of 1,350 yards, it had 37 hardstandings of the pan type spaced along an encircling perimeter track. The main technical area, between runway heads 26 and 33 on the east side of the airfield, eventually had seven hangars, all T2s except the most northerly which was a B1. There was another T2 on the south-west side, between runways 01 and 15 near Wades Farm, and two more T2s on the south-east corner between 01 and 33 by Millhill Farm. Five of the nine hangars were built during 1943-44 for use by No. 12 Maintenance Unit for assembling and storing Horsa gliders, a surprising use for a planned operational bomber station. Domestic sites, for 2,135 males and 355 females were dispersed in farmland south of the Skitfield road to the east of the airfield, and the bomb stores were off the south-west side. Kirk & Kirk Ltd are believed to have been responsible for erection of many of the buildings.

Construction work was fairly complete by the late summer of 1942. In October, Foulsham became the operational base of the first two RAF squadrons equipped with the North American Mitchell, Nos. 98 and 180. No. 98 had a previous existence in the First World War but No. 180 was a new birth when both units were given substance at West Raynham a few weeks before the move into Foulsham. It took three months to work up on these aircraft and the first operation from Foulsham — an attack on an oil storage plant in Belgium — conducted on January 22, 1943, met stiff opposition from ground fire and fighters. Of the 12 aircraft involved, three were missing, including that of the CO of No. 180 Squadron. This operation had been conducted at low-level, a form of attack that changed to bombing from medium altitudes at an optimum 10,000 feet. With No. 2 Group's transfer to the Second Tactical Air Force on June 1, 1943, the Mitchell's days at Foulsham were numbered and in mid-August they moved south to Dunsfold. The station then came under No. 3 Group administration. During service with Bomber Command, ten Mitchells from Foulsham were lost during operations.

Foulsham was then used during No. 3 Group's switch from Stirlings to Lancasters. In September, No. 514 Squadron formed at the station and No. 1678 Heavy Conversion Flight arrived to supply crews. The squadron
