

was a comfortable thing for me to praise people to openly . . . On the other hand, Henry expects it . . . He, in turn, responded that without my having this, as he puts it, courage to make the difficult decision of December 15th, we would not be where we are today."

The unsatisfactory end to the most unsatisfactory and painful war in American history will be, like Kissinger himself, a footnote to a presidency that will be remembered for the bold initiative to China combined with a degree of détente with the Soviet Union.

Today we are all of us in Nixon's debt for seizing an opportunity (given his nature, the world is governed by deeds, not motives) in order to make sense of this to one third of a century of dangerous nonsense.

Finally, I am happy to say that the ever-readiest householder of saddle River, New Jersey, continues to surprise. In the spring of last year he addressed a fund-raising event at the Disneyland Hotel, in Orange County, California. For the right-wingers' pleasure, he was obliged to do a bit of the Russians-are-coming; then he made absolute sense.

"The Soviet Union needs a deal," Nixon said. "And we should give them one. But for a price." Noting that the West has a five-to-one edge in economic power over the Soviets, Nixon said that this advantage should be used as an 'economic lever'. Because 'simply to have a program that would lead to a balance of nuclear terror is not enough. We must try to add to that a new dimension of the use of America's and the free world's economic power as both a carrot and a stick.' Predictably, the press did not pick up on any of this, but history will, and since we are all of us Nixon and he is us, the fact that he went to Peking and Moscow in order to demonstrate to all the world the absolute necessity of coexistence proves that there is not only good in him but in us as well - hope, too.

6 HOLLYWOOD!

One morning last spring (June 1981), I sat a vice for myself in the Hollywood hills; then I descended to the flats of Beverly Hills to a haircut at the barber shop in the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, where I found the Wire Hack, now half as old as time; his remaining white hairs had just been trimmed; he was being manicured; the large yellow diamond still sparkles on that finger which he refers to as a 'pinkie'. The Wire Hack's eyes have lost a bit of their sparkle but then eyes that have looked with deep suspicion into those of F. Scott Fitzgerald and of Y. Frank Freeman have earned their mica-glare.

When I greeted him, he said, accurately, "Who do you want to be governor of this schematish state?" When I said that I didn't want to be governor (I was a candidate for the US Senate) he nodded shyly. "That's what I told people," he said, cryptic as always. Then: "It's over there. In my briefcase. This Xerox copy. You can borrow it. Everybody's in it. Not that I know a lot of these young hunches they get nowadays with their heads and long hair. Remember when there was only the one head of the mule and he was there forever? But a lot of old-timers are in it, too. Ray's in it. Real huncher job like that one that - you know, what's his name, did no Dore . . ." I supplied the name of Lillian Ross. He nodded, "I wanted Dore at the time . . ."

In due course, I read the Xerox of a book - at some as the Wire Hack would say - called Indecent Exposure by a journalist named
