Arms Control Theory And Practice:

Arms Control Michael J. Sheehan, 1988-01-01 Conventional Arms Control Theory and Practice Gary B. Brown, Army War College (U.S.), 2004

Conventional arms control theory and practice matured during the prolonged period of the Cold War. Treaties, agreements, inspections, and the institutions that managed them became and remain almost routine and entrenched. However, the end of the Cold War has resulted in a limited re-evaluation of arms control objectives, processes, and institutions. Many agreements were based on East-West or NATO-Warsaw Pact divisions. Since the Warsaw Pact no longer exists and Cold War era tensions between East and West are markedly reduced, several questions concerning existing arms control agreements arise: Does arms control serve the same purpose today as it did during the Cold War? What measures of effectiveness should be applied to arms control in the post-Cold War and the post-9/11 era? How does arms control help serve United States security interest in the current world order? Assuming the United States wants to continue conventional arms control in the post-Cold War and post-9/11 world, where should the United States policy go? To answer these questions, an examination of United States policies regarding large numbers of conventional armaments, both in necessary standing forces and those excess to a nation's requirements, stockpiles of aging and excess munitions, the control and management of stockpiles of Small Arms and Light Weapons (SALW), and existing arms control agreements and treaties must be accomplished. This paper will examine arms control history and current initiatives in order to argue that arms control is still valid in the post-Cold War era and make recommendations on where U.S. policy should go.

Unconventional and Strategic Weapons and their respective treaties or agreements i.e. Biological Weapons Convention (BWC), chemical Weapons Convention (CWC), and Nuclear Weapons are not considered in this review.

Arms Control for the Third Nuclear Age David A. Cooper, 2021

International relations scholar David A. Cooper offers a reappraisal of classic arms control theory that advocates for reprioritizing deterrence over disarmament in a new era of nuclear multipolarity.

Strategies of Arms Control Stuart Croft, 1996

In this groundbreaking analysis, Stuart Croft brings the subject of arms control into the era of complex, multi-polar international relations. He moves beyond the narrow definitions of the phenomenon associated with the Cold War to show how it not only has a long past but also a clear future. The author begins by tracing the history of agreements between polities over weapons back to ancient times. An understanding of this history allows him to put forward a typology of arms control. It occurs at the end of major conflicts, stabilises balances between states, develops norms of behaviour, manages weapons proliferation, and acts as a tool of international organisations. Stuart Croft examines the evolution of these five qualitatively different strategies and applies the typology to arms control agreements in the post-Cold War world. This definitive new study will be of interest to students in international relations and security studies, as well as specialists in these disciplines.
