

The image displays a 10x10 grid of 100 small, colorful posters or cards. Each card features a unique design, often with a mix of text, illustrations, and diagrams. The designs are diverse, covering a wide range of topics including science, nature, social issues, and general information. Many of the cards have a logo in the top left corner that reads "Cascadia Study" with a small graphic of a tree and a person. The cards are arranged in a grid, with some cards having a white background and others having a colored background. The overall aesthetic is that of a collection of hand-drawn or hand-painted cards, possibly for a community project or a study group.
