

AFTER

Concrete Poetry / Word Images / Visual Language is an aesthetic movement in poetry that abandons the linear arrangement of words for a greater emphasis on design, layout and organization of space. The word becomes a plastic entity, an ideogram, a word-scape.

Words point beyond themselves to ideas, to mood / memory experience, extending the way in which language can be used to communicate - to produce an experience.

Altho formal values are important, I feel the need to include social values which involve one more totally with one's environment, to make one feel/hear/see images for the mind to seize on. Robert Frost once said that poetry must be "words that have become deeds."

Thus the viewer of Concrete Poetry comes in direct confrontation with the poem, which is in direct confrontation also, with its environment. The poem then becomes a true extension of oneself, more than ever uniting art with life.
