

Canadian-American Relations

- Although Americans were neutral until 1941, much was done to assist Canada and Britain before the US entered the war:
 - 1942-43 Alaska Highway → to protect against Japanese attack, this project was financed and built almost entirely by Americans; the highway, however, crossed 2500 km of Canadian soil from Dawson Creek, British Columbia to Fairbanks, Alaska; this remote area of Canada almost became an American state during the construction period; a pipeline was also built
 - Canadians and Americans also cooperated in military operations; in Italy they created a joint elite commando force
- When the war ended, Canada's focus had permanently shifted away from Great Britain and closer to the United States
