

Juvenile Diversion Evaluation Findings (cont.)

- ▶ On average, youth were 15 years old at the time of intake into diversion
- ▶ A greater proportion of youth participating in diversion were male (65%) and over half (55%) of diversion participants were White, non-Hispanic; just under a third (32%) of participants were identified as Hispanic or Latino
- ▶ Overall, results continued to show that males were more likely to recidivate than females, and youth with prior police contact were more likely to recidivate than those who did not have prior police contact. However, there were few significant differences in the impact of diversion programming across these groups
- ▶ Desired post scores on four of the seven short-term outcomes were associated with reduced recidivism: decision making skills, sense of accountability, connection to community, and risky behavioral intentions
