

Bridges into Work? An Evaluation of Local Exchange and Trading Schemes (LETS)

COLIN C. WILLIAMS, THERESA ALDRIDGE, ROGER LEE, ANDREW LEYSHON,
NIGEL THRIFT AND JANE TOOKE

ABSTRACT Recently, the policy community has been paying particular attention to Local Exchange and Trading Schemes (LETS) as potential bridges into work for the unemployed. Up until now, however, there has only been piecemeal evidence on whether LETS are effective in this regard. In this paper, therefore, the full results of the first comprehensive evaluation of LETS are reported. In order to feed into the 'evidence-based policy-making' process, we evaluate whether LETS are effective first, as bridges into employment, second, as bridges into self-employment and, third and finally, at building reciprocal exchange networks. Our finding is that although LETS provide an indirect bridge into employment by improving employability, they are most effective as seedbeds for the development of self-employed business ventures and as vehicles for facilitating exchange beyond employment. For LETS to become more effective bridges into work for a wider range of the unemployed, nevertheless, a number of barriers to participation need to be tackled. The paper concludes by outlining how this could be achieved.

Introduction

Originally pioneered in Canada during the 1980s, Local Exchange Trading Schemes (LETS) are non-profit-making schemes designed to encourage people to come together to trade services and goods amongst themselves using a local currency instead of sterling. They are created when a group of people form an association and create a local unit of exchange (e.g. 'bobbins' in Manchester, 'solents' in Southampton). Members then list their offers of, and requests for, goods and services that they wish to exchange in a directory, priced in the local unit of currency. Individuals decide what they want to trade, who they want to trade with, and how much trade they wish to carry out. The price is agreed between the buyer and seller. The association keeps a record of the transactions by means of a system of cheques written in the local LETS units. Every time a transaction is made, these cheques are sent to the treasurer who works in a similar manner to a bank sending out regular statements of account to the members. No actual cash is issued since all transactions are by cheque and no interest is charged or paid. The level of LETS units exchanged is thus entirely dependent upon the extent of trading undertaken. Neither does one need to earn money before one can spend
