

Gaps in circuits. The bulb in this picture does not light. Can you see why? What would you do to make it light?

There would be a closed circuit if there were no opening, or gap. But as long as there is a gap, the circuit is open. Electricity cannot flow across the gap. The bulb does not light.

SOME THINGS TO TRY

1. How could you close a gap like the one in this picture? Could you touch the wires together? Suppose the wires were covered by cotton, rubber, or plastic. Then what would you have to do to close the gap?

Check your ideas. Make some tests with a circuit like this.

2. How could you close the gap in a circuit like this one? With a rubber band? With some foil? With a paper clip? With a second flashlight bulb?

3. Suppose you wanted to keep electricity from flowing in a circuit. Where would you make a gap? Could the gap be anywhere in the circuit?

4. Will the tiniest gap you can make keep electricity from flowing? Can it be as thin as a hair? As thin as a piece of plastic wrap?
