

ADVICE TO CLEVER CHILDREN

Celia Green

'The human psychosis is extremely simple. Hatred of reality (originally caused, it is to be supposed, by a traumatic experience or experiences of objective impotence) has become displaced on to other human beings. This state of affairs is expressed by attitudes of indifference to reality and of interest in human society.

The latter interest is usually rationalised as altruism.'

'The starting point is that one is interested in the universe. One observes that one is finite and that this is intolerable. One has a limited time and apparently limited capacities with which to find anything out.

Therefore it is possible to despair. There are many orders of despair; and none of them are known to normal psychology.'
