Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development,1984 A Review of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's Adjustable-rate Mortgage Regulations and the Current ARM Proposal Henry J. Cassidy,1984 This paper summarizes the FHLBB's regulations on adjustable rate mortgages ARM's from 1979 to the present It stresses that ARM disclosure has become complex and non standardized because the complexity and diversity of the ARM have increased over this period Each of the 1979 1980 1981 and 1982 regulations is summarized according to the various ARM features It is argued that teaser rate ARM's may be economically rational but they do present the borrower with the potential for a high degree of payment shock Chairman Gray's proposed principles of responsible ARM lending conclude that paper Adjustable Rate Mortgages United States. rate mortgages ARMs made a dramatic entry into the U S mortgage market subsequent to the passage of the Garn St Germain Depository Institutions Reform Act of 1982 By the mid 1990 s over 20 percent of first mortgages were adjustable and were used across a wide range of urban market types Going forward to 2007 the percent of families with an ARM as a first mortgage had declined to 11% and the use of ARM s was often then described as a tool for affordability since the rates are commonly lower than for a fixed rate mortgage for a given repayment risk class of borrower By 2013 the percent of ARMs as a first mortgage had fallen still further to just under 9% and the use of a second mortgage had fallen as well From the supply side the longer run attractiveness of ARMs was reduced by extensive securitization allowing lenders to avoid correlated risk in local housing markets Moreover with the overall decline in mortgage rates in the context of zero lower bound conditions and low expected inflation the spread between fixed and adjustable rates narrowed making the affordability component to ARM far less significant though this dimension appears to continue to apply to African American families Favorable economic conditions induce a demand for mortgages especially by higher risk borrowers and transactions occur at higher rates A changing composition of the mortgage market emerges with a diverse set of borrowers actively using ARMs Data from the Panel Study of Income Dynamics PSID for 1996 2007 and 2013 are used to study borrowing decisions Panel analysis confirms effects of education non housing wealth expected duration at the current residence and early financial experience in reliance on ARM mortgages
