Abstract

Pedophilic sexual interest is a key target in the forensic assessment and rehabilitation process of child sexual offenders. Yet, there is limited evidence on the biopsychosocial factors underpinning pedophilic interest. Accordingly, the aim of the present study was to test the predictive role of psychopathology and personality dimensions in pedophilic sexual interest in a sample of convicted male child sexual offenders. Participants answered to a set of self-report measures assessing psychopathology, impulsiveness, personality factors, and trait-affect. Pedophilic sexual interest was measured based on the behavioral proxies of sexual arousal to children. Findings revealed that anxiety and interpersonal sensitivity, as well as lower extroversion and higher conscientiousness, predict higher levels of pedophilic sexual interest. These data support the assumption that marked social inadequacy and difficulties align with the sexual interest by prepubescent children.

Keywords: Pedophilia; Child Sexual Abuse; Psychopathology; Personality; Impulsiveness

Introduction

In the psychiatry and psychology field, pedophilia relates to the sexual interest in prepubescent children. The concept of pedophilia is formally recognized as a clinical entity in the DSM-5 (Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 5th edition) [1] and ICD-10 (International Classification of Diseases, 10th edition) [2], encompassing nosology criteria such as recurrent and intense sexually arousing fantasies, urges, or behaviors involving sexual activity with children. The concepts of pedophilia and child sexual abuse must be however differentiated: while the former relates to a clinical diagnose, the last relates to a legal entity. Indeed, only a part of convicted child sexual offenders presents pedophilic sexual interest. This suggests that while some child sexual offenders have probably acted upon their pedophilic urges, others have acted upon other motivational/criminological factors. In the context of forensic sexology, the debate surrounding the concept of pedophilia expands well beyond the criteria of nosology; it includes the issues about the stability of pedophilic sexual interest, its etiology and maintenance factors, or the assessment (including the risk-assessment) of pedophilic sexual arousal for forensic purposes.

Within this respect, pedophilic sexual interest is both regarded as a stable/life-long condition [3,4,5] or as a persistent, yet flexible state, that can be intervened and changed with tailored intervention methods [6]. It is worth noting however, that despite the stability versus flexibility discussion, pedophilic sexual interest is considered a main recidivism factor in child sexual abuse [7], and hence requiring specific forensic evaluation [8]. Furthermore, it must be recognized that despite the vast majority of individuals presenting pedophilic sexual interest are men, pedophile women have also been described [9].

Another area of great forensic importance is that of the vulnerability factors for pedophilic sexual interest. Studies on the topic of the etiology and maintenance factors underpinning pedophilia have been conducted under the umbrella of the neurosciences, psychiatry, and psychological sciences. While some studies have pointed neurodevelopmental features and brain structure specificities as proxies of pedophilia [10,11], others have suggested that psychopathological markers [12], and developmental/familial experiences [13,14], are milestones in the conceptualization of pedophilic sexual interest. Yet, there is only minimal evidence in the literature regarding the nature of Physique and Delinquent Behavior Emil M. Hartl, Edward P. Monnelly, Roland D. Elderkin, 2013-10-22 Physique and Delinquent Behavior A Thirty year Follow Up of William H Sheldon's Varieties of Delinquent Youth is a progress report on the lives of 200 men. The men detailed in this book started as boys in the middle 1930s that included runaways, truants, and delinquents. They became adults during the fluid socioeconomic, political, and cultural times in the United States. The book defines the psychiatric variables and presents brief biographies of these men. The authors then apply a statistical review of the careers of these men that included 20 cases in a normal group, 90 cases in a second order psychopathic group, 12 cases in a borderline psychopathy group, 11 cases in a first order psychopathy group, and 16 cases of alcoholism. The rest are also classified in other groups such as gynephrenosis, criminality, or medical insufficiency. The authors point out that an increasing probability of gynephrenotic difficulty in men whose ratings diverge far from that of the male mean. The authors also note that the constitutional approach they applied can explain some complex relation between biology and sex-related behavior. This book is suitable for behavioral scientists, psychiatrists, psychologists, students, and professors in the sciences of human behavior.

Suicide and Self-Damaging Behavior Denys de Catanzaro, 2013-10-22 Suicide and Self-Damaging Behavior A Sociobiological Perspective reviews the status of suicide and other exceptions to the prevailing regularities of behavior. This book discusses the apparent anomaly of self-destructive behavior, current incidence of suicide and self-injury, self-destructiveness in other species, and biological fitness and social ecology of suicide. The pro-suicidal gene expression and natural selection, death concept, breakdown of other life-preserving factors with coping failure, and selection processes and altruism are also elaborated. This text likewise covers the chronic self-abuse, risk-taking, and self-injurious or self-mutilative behavior. This publication is a good source for anthropologists, psychologists, sociologists, and social scientists concerned with self-destructive behavior.
