Background: There are still some gaps in the summary and generalization of cosmetic-related adverse reaction reports.

Objective: The aim of this study is to summarize and analyze the occurrence of cosmetic adverse reactions in Shanghai Han population by using available survey data.

Materials and Methods: Collection, statistics and analysis of patients with cosmetic adverse reactions in Shanghai Huashan Hospital from 2017 to 2021.

Results: Among the 1004 patients, most of them (96.71%) were diagnosed as cosmetic contact dermatitis, which often occurred within 3 days of using cosmetics (51.79%). A total of 260 patients were tested with patch test, but the compliance rate was only 18.08%. Among them, 240 patients underwent additional European standard allergen tests, and positive allergens were detected in 210 cases (87.5%). Univariate analysis revealed that dosage form (emulsion and cream), age (≤ 25 years) and the allergic ingredients triethanolamine, rose oil, propylene glycol, thiomersal and musk ambrette are associated with the occurrence of cosmetic adverse reactions within seven days. A logit prediction model was also successfully constructed: $\text{Logit}(P) = 1.710 - 0.796 \times 1 + 1.185 \times 2 - 3.650 \times 3 - 1.335 \times 4$.

Conclusions: This study complements the data reported on cosmetic adverse reactions in the Chinese Han population and suggests that in future clinical diagnosis and data collection, emphasis should be placed on patch testing, combining the patch test with cosmetic pretest with the European standard allergen test to improve the detection rate.

Keywords: adverse reaction reporting, cosmetics, contact dermatitis, personal care products, patch tests

Introduction

Unlike the general population's perception of cosmetics, the medical definition of "cosmetics" is any product that cleanses and beautifies the exterior of the body (hair, nails, skin, etc.).¹⁻³ In this study, we used the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA)² definition of cosmetic products, including skin care products, sunscreens, hair dyes, hair removal creams, etc.

With the increasing demand for cosmetics and the increasing variety of cosmetic products,⁴ adverse reactions caused by cosmetics are gaining more and more attention. Several studies have shown that the chemicals contained in some cosmetics and some naturally occurring toxic ingredients, such as snake venom, may pose a threat to the health of people with allergies.⁵⁻²⁰ Some cosmetic products would interact with the skin microbiota and cause certain degree of disruption of the skin barrier.¹¹ Mild symptoms include only mild allergic reactions, such as local itching and erythema, etc, while severe cases may even have physical symptoms such as headache and nausea.^{2,12,22}

With the increasing frequency of cosmetic adverse reactions, more attention has been paid to the identification and monitoring of adverse cosmetic reactions.¹⁴ One of the most commonly used diagnostic methods is the patch test.¹²⁻²⁷
